The reader, to know what day each voter polled on, must compare the number placed before the name with the numbers in the lower column; which, if more than one, or less than the next, will tell him the day immediately.

If it should happen to be the same number with one of the days, it tells the reader it is the last man polled that day; if but one more, the first the day following.

The reader is also to consider that the names of persons very often vary; and though every one thinks he spells and pronounces his own name right, yet it is not in the power of a clerk, at the time of polling, to spell every man's name exactly as he would do it himself: He must therefore be ruled more by the sound than the letters, in looking for the person's name wanted. For what writer could tell the difference in our northern manner of pronouncing Cay and Kay; Carr and Kerr; Leighton, Leaton and Layton; Turnbull and Trumbull; Hindmarsh and Hymmers; Atkinson and Atchison; Kirfop and Crisfop; Hawdon, Haydon, Aydon, and Haddon; Irwin and Urwin; Eccles and Hectles, &c. yet these names are often corruptions of, or confounded and understood one for another.

Those persons who are concerned for their respective corporated companies, need but run over the whole, and mark in the margin every one who claims their freedom under their standard; and such, after being examined by the company's books, and found to be doubtful, ought, with the remarks necessary, either to be inserted in their regular journal, or preserved carefully amongst their other papers, to furnish evidence in case a legal enquiry be necessary to prevent a torrent of encroachments, which at once puts an illegal and unconstitutional power in the hands of those who assume it, and deprives every burges of his just privilege, and consequential weight in the state. Every man, of what party soever, should join heartily in this cause on the least appearance of a suspicious taint, for if neglected, sooner or late, it will come home to himself or posterity.
